Civil War, when many women devoted their energy to the war efforts. However, following the war's end in 1865, Stanton and fellow activist Susan B. Anthony formed the American Equal Rights Association in 1866, which was devoted to the ultimate end of voting rights for all regardless of race or gender. The momentum started to pick up once again. Following the end of the Civil War, black men were granted the right to vote due to the adoption of the 15th Amendment in 1870. At the time, this was a division among many American women, who also did not allow the right to vote. In 1869, Stanton and Anthony formed the National Woman Suffrage Association (NWSA). The party started to form a leadership of women who would act to fight for a constitutional amendment that included women instead of supporting the 15th Amendment the way it was.

During the elections of 1890, 1894, 1896, 1898 and 1900 in South Dakota, ballot measures were proposed to allow women's voting right and were ultimately defeated at the polls. An 1894 measure, which would have granted women's suffrage in school elections, was also defeated.

After decades of arguing both for and against the legislation, Congress finally passed the 19th Amendment in June 1919, and needed at least 36 states to vote in favor of it becoming law, a process known as ratification. Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan were the first states to ratify the amendment on June 11, 1919. By the end of the month, Kansas, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Texas followed. On December 4, 1919, South Dakota became the twenty-first state to ratify the amendment. Finally, on August 18, 1920, Tennessee became the thirty-sixth state to ratify the amendment, making women's suffrage legal in the United States.

By Emily Sougrat

While women at America's western frontier officially gained the national vote in 1919, it was 100 years ago that the state of South Dakota reached the 19th Amendment, becoming the twenty-first state in the nation to do so.

The women's suffrage movement began as early as 1848 when the First Women's Rights Convention was held in Seneca Falls, New York, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, one of the leading figures of the women's rights and women's suffrage movements, wrote the “Declaration of Sentiments,” which served as the basis for the first Women's Rights Convention in 1848. The convention was a very early event.

Following the Seneca Falls Convention, the suffrage movement started to create some nationwide momentum, but the efforts were somewhat put on hold during the Civil War, when many women were fighting on the front. When the war ended in 1865, Stanton and fellow activist Susan B. Anthony founded the American Equal Rights Association in 1866, which was devoted to the ultimate goal of voting rights for all, regardless of race or gender. The momentum started to pick up once again. Following the end of the Civil War, black men were granted the right to vote due to the adoption of the 15th Amendment in 1870. At the time, this was a division among many American women, who also did not allow the right to vote.

In 1869, Stanton and Anthony founded the National Woman Suffrage Association (NWSA). The party started to form a leadership of women who would act to fight for a constitutional amendment that included women instead of supporting the 15th Amendment the way it was.

In February of 1879, one of the first documented local discussions of women's suffrage took place at the old Central School, located in Canton Public Library currently. Several female students from Canton reportedly organized the event and invited students from Beldot, Iowa, to attend as well. The gathering was a debate-style meeting, with the question “Should women be allowed the right of Suffrage?” as the central focus. The Canton students had the school house decorated with flags and welcome signs for the occasion.

During the fall of 1894, nationwide suffrage advocates carried Carrie Chapman Catt, Anna Howard Shaw and Henry B. Blackwell each made their own public addresses at Railroad Hall on South Main Street in Canton. Shaw also spoke in support of over 1,000 people at the Lincoln County Agricultural Association Fairgrounds in September 1899 in support of the women's suffrage movement. Minnesota Julia B. Nelson also gave a pro-suffrage speech at the Methodist church in Canton that fall.

The local home of Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Nash was a frequent gathering place for the local Equal Franchise Club, which began meeting as early as September 1890. Nash was one of the key figures in leading the movement through at least February of 1910, when Mr. Nash was referred to as President of the group.

In November 1909, suffragist Rachel Fowler Aeyser was a frequent speaker at the Lincoln County Courthouse while visiting South Dakota as a state-wide suffrage campaign in Siusa Falls. Several other pro-suffrage speeches and debates were also held at the courthouse throughout this time.

In January 1903, the Canton Suffrage Club met at the home of Mrs. Jenny (Ralph) Gifford and organized for a ballot campaign. Jenny Rudolph was a teacher, principal, and secretary of the state education association before marrying Mr. Oscar Sherman Gifford in 1909. She continued to serve on the local school board following their marriage. Gifford hosted women's suffrage activist Perle Pefaul in her home in January of 1909 while she was on the campaign trail, and it is documented that Pefaul asked Gifford to help translate suffrage literature into German. Gifford, however, declined the offer. Gifford also went on to serve as the chair of the Canton Suffrage Campaign Committee in 1919.

In February of 1910, the Canton Women's Study Club held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Kennedy, where Mr. Kennedy endowed the women's suffrage movement. Also at the meeting, Mr. Arthur R. Brown, a prominent Canton attorney and president of the Lincoln County Library, gave a speech in support of the movement as well.

While there are just a few examples of suffrage activists taking action in Canton, the documentation of these local events tend to be forgotten with the passage of time.

In the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), Canada, Mexico and the United States had opened their markets to dairy, poultry and eggs — across our dairy producers and farmers. Canada was a major player in the NAFTA, but on the USMCA is purely political. As we head into an election year, Canada’s political parties are the last the thing we need. I came to Washington because there is meaningful work to get done and北京 need assurance that we’re not going to be a country to return. But her instinctive act of bravery puts her in the debt of a woman resident of Rocky Points.

Eight Days

Eight Days. That’s how many working days the U.S. House of Representatives has left this year to pass major legislation.

Eight days to pass a budget and eight days to finalize the United States Mexico Canada Agreement (USMCA).

For comments, President Trump finally submitted the USMCA trade agreement with our allies by November 30, 2018 — and it’s past time. Am I surprised it’s taken over a year for Congress to act on a trade agreement that would add $68 billion to our nation’s GDP and create more than 176,000 jobs? I hate to admit it, but no.

Last week, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi told reporters she’s uncertain the House will take up the USMCA before the end of the year. This is unacceptable. Our producers need the certainty the USMCA will provide, and our negotiators with China need reassurance that Congress is serious about passing new trade agreements.

The president and the administration did its job — it’s past time the Speaker of the House does his. We need to bring the USMCA up for a vote now.

Our allies are waiting on us. Mexico’s Senate passed the USMCA in June — it took them three weeks to pass the deal. Now Mexico’s leadership has sent a letter urging Speaker Pelosi to send it to the House. Canada stands ready to sign when the United States signs, and we’ve reached an agreement amongst them.

The House has a small window to support the USMCA, and despite the lengthy waiting period, the Speaker and the Democratic Ways and Means Committee Chairman adjusted the USMCA has left this year.

If the outlaws were former Rangers who had led back in Afghanistan when he skill it reminded him of raids he’d rushed in and out with such speed, prisoners from Alcatraz and SFPD turned into the outlaws, looking for Nell Pratt.

Mysteries by Sheila Connolly. A value in using his skills, convincing her superiors to add skull to the killer task force. Quinn Colson had to admit he has other ideas. The Drifter by Lauren Paine (Large Print). This book was purchased funds donated by Bud Steensland.

The first murder of old allies, new enemies, and a lot of lore. Four the Dark by Chris Monroy. Four years in a town populated by murderer targets entire families in this crime novel. Police and the FBI call in forensic investigator and actual killer expert Darby Stancher, who makes a career of solving these cases.

There are people that are trying to genetically identical copies of a phim into an egg that had been emptied. Chickens and mice have already been cloned by transferring the nucleus of cloned cells, clones could be sources to clone humans are that infertile. Call them identical twins, they have clones can also occur naturally, we meant, you could go out and have room in your freezer to store the fedding South Dakota is trying to help out and about: if you could go anywhere in the world, where would you go and what would you do? By Anika Meier

Cloning is the production of genetically identical copies of a biological entity. A clone is the same species or species group, the same genotype as the original. Researchers have cloned biological materials such as genes, cells, tissues and entire organisms, like sheep. But clones can also occur naturally, we call them identical twins, they have been collected from the same genetic makeup as each other. Many animals like cows, sheep, chickens and mice have been already been cloned by transferring the nuclei of a cell taken from an early embryo stage of an egg that had been emptied of its nucleus. From a technical perspective, cloning humans and other primates is more complicated than other materials, the why cloning of human beings hasn’t been successfully done yet. There are people that are trying to clone human beings possible. The advantages of being able to clone humans are that infertile people could have children from cloned cells, clones could be sources for transplant organs or tissues. It could assist scientists in the eel warning, after editing or removing bad genes cloning could lead humans for specific traits and cloning could enhance and advance human development. The downside of cloning is that it could be a violation of the clone’s individual human rights (for example when the original needs to replace an organ) and cloning raises the question of a moral or religious right to an exclusive identity, it could produce questionable results for the clone and society. Human cloning can help us in many ways (for example when someone needs a new heart, they could take the cloned one), but the question is if it’s morally right to copy or edit someone’s identity. Many proponents of vegetarianism say that eating meat harms health and a vegetarian diet delivers complete nutrition and can provide health benefits. They also point to evidence about the ecological harm ranching produces, including wasted resources, causes deforestation and creating pollution. They often say that killing animals for food is cruel and unethical since non-animal food sources are plentiful. Opponents of vegetarianism say that consuming meat is healthy and humans since it is the most conventional protein source available, and that producing vegetables causes many of the same environmental problems as producing meat. They also argue that humans have been eating and enjoying meat for 2.3 million years. Both sides provide valid points, it is everyone’s decision whether they want to be vegetarian or not. Experimenting with what works best for your lifestyle can take a little time, but even cutting back on meat on a day or week will present a noticeable outcome on your diet and the environment.

By Anika Meier

The United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) report that Americans eat an average of 38 pounds of meat, 93 pounds of chicken, and 52 pounds of pork; per person per year. About 3.3% of the US adult population and 4% of the youth population are vegetarians, which mean that they do not eat meat. Many vegetarians say that eating meat harms health and a vegetarian diet delivers complete nutrition and can provide health benefits. They also point to evidence about the ecological harm ranching produces, including wasted resources, causes deforestation and creating pollution. It was a great Thanksgiving day as I sat talking to relatives at Sterling and Mary Jan's house then ate my way through much and was full until I woke up the next day but it is between that watched 2 and a half football games on tv and couldn't of caught less who won the game but you have to watch the game it's a tradition. I did not get a nap but it was fun day and a great way to spend the whole weekend. I hope everyone had a nice day and lots of relatives and even more football this thanksgiving season so Happy Holiday Season.

I am going to sell all the items belonging to the Nebraska vs Iowa game and once again I would like to thank all those that finished but at least it was exciting and exciting for Husker fans as we once again lost by a last field goal giant leak and we hope that this year we can't figure it out. This finishes our season with just not enough wins for a bowl game but hopefully every time can help them start their recruiting season soon. Like most fans of Nebraska we will think Scott Frost is the answer but now we can teach them how to tackle along with good old-fashioned blocking and tackling football.

If that wasn't enough for me then came Sunday as I got home from work around halftime of the Niners game that no one thought we could win and yes once again we lost by a last field goal and I lost my faith in the coaching staff. But it was all. It was a good season and I think they played good against the hottest team in pro football with the greatest player ever in the history of football according to one radio said about 1,000,000 times while I was watching while I was 1. The play had to be fought for both teams in a down game and cold besides but all said we had a chance just couldn't get to full force. Lots of football left before we win the Superbowl so I will just bend and enjoy. Hey Cy Clowers were state champions so still excited for that so that helps.

Saturday starts our wrestling season with a trip to Dell Rapids for a tournament starting at 9 a.m. and it is a first time tournament for us so now we can teach what Canton wrestling is all about.

This season we will be looking for our 3rd straight state championship and for us to win that we can't get it done. We bring a lot of experience back this year and we have a lot of state tournament experience with all but 2 from our full team qualifying from last year so that is 12 kids that went to state last year and were state champs. Read the wrestling story in next weeks paper and coach Jeremy Swanson wrote some stuff in it and did a great job telling about this years team and what they have accomplished and what to expect this season. The banks coach. Good luck wrestling team and I don't want till state championship so we have individual champions along with a team championship on the way so back we might as well win them both while we are three any way.
